The story begins with the TARDIS landing on the moon in the year 2020. The Doctor, Susan Foreman, Ian Chesterton, and Barbara Wright emerge from the ship and are greeted by a strange and unfamiliar sight. The lunar surface is littered with abandoned equipment and debris, suggesting that something has gone terribly wrong.

As the travelers explore their surroundings, they soon encounter a group of survivors from a crashed spaceship. The survivors tell the Doctor and his companions that they have been attacked by a mysterious alien force. The aliens, known as the Yeti, are said to be incredibly powerful and ruthless.

The Doctor and his companions agree to help the survivors fight off the Yeti. They travel to the survivors' base, where they find that the aliens are already preparing for an attack. The Doctor and his companions must use all of their ingenuity and courage to defeat the Yeti and save the survivors.

Choose the Future: Terror on the Moon is a thrilling and suspenseful adventure that showcases the best of Doctor Who. The First Doctor is at his brilliant best, using his intellect and compassion to save the day. The companions are also well-developed and relatable, each playing an important role in the story.

The episode's setting on the moon is both unique and atmospheric. The lunar landscape provides a sense of isolation and danger, and the Yeti are suitably menacing villains. The episode also features some of the best special effects of its time, which help to create a truly immersive experience.

Choose the Future: Terror on the Moon is a must-watch for any fan of Doctor Who. It is a classic example of the show's ability to combine thrilling adventure with thought-provoking themes. The episode is also a testament to the enduring legacy of the First Doctor, who remains one of the most iconic characters in television history.
