Early Life and Career

Curtis LeMay was born in Columbus, Ohio, in 1906. He attended Ohio State University, where he studied engineering. After graduating, he joined the Army Air Corps in 1928. LeMay quickly rose through the ranks, and by the outbreak of World War II, he was a colonel commanding the 305th Bombardment Group.

World War II

LeMay played a major role in the Allied victory in World War II. He led the 305th Bombardment Group in the bombing of Japan, and he later commanded the XXI Bomber Command in the Pacific Theater. LeMay's bombing campaigns were controversial, but they helped to bring about the end of the war.

Chief of Staff of the Air Force

After the war, LeMay was appointed Chief of Staff of the Air Force. As Chief of Staff, LeMay oversaw the development of the Air Force into a major military power. He also played a key role in the development of the nuclear deterrent. LeMay's leadership style was controversial, but he was successful in transforming the Air Force into a powerful and effective fighting force.

The Cold War

During the Cold War, LeMay was a staunch advocate of a strong military posture. He believed that the United States needed to be prepared to fight and win a nuclear war. LeMay's views were controversial, but they helped to shape U.S. military policy during the Cold War.

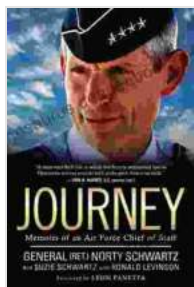

Legacy

General Curtis E. LeMay was a complex and controversial figure. He was a brilliant military strategist who helped to shape the U.S. Air Force into a major military power. However, he was also a ruthless and uncompromising leader. LeMay's legacy is still debated today, but there is no doubt that he was one of the most influential figures in the history of the U.S. Air Force.

Memoirs of an Air Force Chief of Staff is a fascinating and informative book that provides a firsthand account of the history of the U.S. Air Force.

LeMay's memoirs are a valuable resource for anyone interested in military history, leadership, or strategy.
